Selective Reading

King Josiah (622 BC) found a copy of the Law in the temple, and his subsequent reverence of it as such demonstrates its authority in the life of Israelite society (2 Kings 22:3–20). After captivity, Ezra had a copy of the Law in which to lead the nation (Ezra 7:6; Neh. 8:1ff). Centuries before them, Joshua (13th century BC) read the same (Josh 8:34–35), and King David was to have had a personal copy (Deut. 17:18–20; cf. Deut. 31:9, 25–26). We know David consulted it after Uzzah died (2 Sam. 6:1–10; cf. 1 Chron. 15:1–13), but it’s obvious that it wasn’t always central.

The interlude from the reading of Joshua until the next reading of the Law is a noted period of silence. During that time, Israel was divided, and the northern kingdom following an idolatrous path while the southern kingdom sinned as well but had periods of reformation.

The next public reading came after the high priest Hilkiah found the Book of the Law in the temple during the reign of King Josiah of Judah. Hilkiah took the book to the king’s secretary who then took it to the King. Upon hearing the words of the Book of the Law, King Josiah grieved and sent to inquire of the Lord because all the curses of the book were to be rendered to the unfaithful people of Judah (2 Kings 22–23; 2 Chron. 34). When Josiah assembled the people to have the Book of the Law read in their hearing, Josiah led a covenant renewal to which the people consented. However, because of so many years of apostasy, changing the trajectory of Judah was unrealized. Therefore, the land was purged of its inhabitants so that it could undergo a period of cleansing (cf. Lev. 18:28; 20:22).

This points us to the authority the Law and Prophets had. What we find was that those who were lauded in Scripture, adhered to the Law. We also note that the absence of it from the life of Israel resulted in an ignorance that permitted apostasy and eventually destruction or exile. During the period between the testaments, Israel became almost legalistic in keeping the Law because of what their forefathers suffered. By the time we arrive in the New Testament, we see how the leaders had built a hedge around the Law to ensure they would never be exiled again.

What Day Is it, Anyway?

Two very different individuals, both of whom have influenced our lives in numerous ways, are Julius Caesar and Pope Gregory XIII. Caesar lived from 100BC to his murder in 44BC. One of his lasting legacies is what we call the Julian Calendar which is still observed in much of the Eastern Orthodox world. For various reasons, the Julian calendar was viewed as flawed and, thus, we come to our Gregorian Calendar.

Pope Gregory 13th lived from 1502-1585 and was pope for the final 13 years of his life. What we call the Gregorian calendar today is observed in most of the western world, although there were some changes made again in 1752 throughout the English-speaking world.

All of this is way to complicated for most of us mortals but our library contains several general histories of Christianity in classification 270.
