Involvement

Garry Evans

A lady once said that she was not awfully miserable, but that she was not as happy as she should be.

She was then asked to write down one of the most unhappiest person she could think of and a list of the traits that described that person.

This is the list she made:

1. She thinks the world revolves around her.
2. What she does for others is for her sake and not theirs.
3. She is touchy.
4. She is spiteful.
5. She is unforgiving.
6. She is unfair.
7. She is envious.
8. She is divisive.
9. She is hateful.
10. She is critical of others.

Are you truly happy? If not, is there any trait on this list that could keep you from being as happy as you could be? Next week we will look at some traits that could help us to be truly happy.

Garry

The Scribe

The first instance of recording Scripture occurs at Moses's hand at the covenant's inauguration between YHWH and Israel (Exod. 24:4–8). Scholars mostly agree that the Book of the Covenant mentioned there entailed chapters 21–23 of Exodus, but opinions vary. Moses' upbringing in Egypt explains how he became a scribe in the first place, because they placed a high amount of esteem and respect on the scribe. They believed that a scribe was his own boss and the highest of trades to which one could aspire. Moses obviously had scribal training in Egypt in the first forty years of his life in the higher echelons of society, and that skill would serve him well as the leader of Israel.

Even in Israel's later history, we see the scribe as one moving in royal circles (2 Chron. 24:11; Esth. 3:12). The scribal chamber was within the palace (Jer. 36:12), and their work often detailed the exploits of the monarchs they served (1 Kings 11:41) as well as the reign of the monarchy itself (1 Kings 14:19, 29). They also served by writing the decrees ordered (Dan. 6:8) and taking dictation (Jer. 36:32). Some might be sent to record the military skirmishes the realm was engaged in (Jer. 52:25), and a useful skill for the scribe to possess in later times was to be bilingual (2 Kings 18:26). Following the station of Moses as a prophet were other prophets who recorded books or records here or there (Josh 24:26; 1 Sam 10:25). Later, we even read about some later holy people referring to what had been written (Dan. 9:2; Neh. 8:1).

This process led what we know as the Old Testament to be grouped around 400 BC, with some arguing that the Law, or Pentateuch (first five books of the Bible), itself was authoritative much earlier. By 200 BC or earlier, the prophets were canonized (cf. Is. 34:16; Jer. 36:6ff). Unlike our Christian Bibles where the Old and New Testaments are major divisions, the Hebrew Bible (Tanakh) grouped its books differently. There are three groupings of books: The Law (Torah) consisting of Gen–Deut. Prophets (Nevi'im) consisting of Josh, Judg., Samuel, and Kings (Former Prophets) Isaiah, Jer., Ezek., and the Twelve (Latter Prophets). Writings (Ketuvim) consisting of Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and Esther (Five Megillot) Daniel, Ezra and Nehemiah, and Chronicles. This tripartite division is reflected from Ben Sira, who was the first to refer to it in this way (180–175 BC) but may be earlier than him.

OREGON TRAIL # 2

From the 1830s to about 1880, historians say that 400,000 people travelled the Oregon Trail and its several offshoots with about 80,000 settling in the lush Willamette Valley. Thousands of these pioneers started their journey from Kentucky, Tennessee and other points east of the Mississippi River where the Stone-Campbell Movement was at its strongest and many of these folks took the message with them on this epic journey.

It is said that, at one point in the mid 19th century, the Churches of Christ/Disciples of Christ constituted the single largest group in Oregon. In his 1997 landmark publication, Christians on the Oregon Trail, Dr. Jerry Rushford has left us with a 500-page scholarly documented treatment of the settlement & glory days of the church and the part it played in one of America's great westward sagas. The book # in our collection is 286.6/Rus/1997.
